

HOW TO INVITE

Creative Ideas to Find You

What if, instead of thinking of creativity as something we need to chase or find, we just sat still?

What if ideas are just as interested in finding the right manifestor (i.e. YOU!) as we are interested in finding them?

What if the fulfilling life we desire is not somewhere ahead of us, or off to the right or left, but right where we are?

In other words, what if all we've ever needed to do is open up and receive it?

IF WE WANT TO TRULY USHER IN CREATIVITY, THEN WE MUST ACKNOWLEDGE THAT WE HUMAN BEINGS ARE IN SERVICE TO IT, NOT
THE OTHER WAY AROUND.

HOW TO INVITE Creative Ideas to Find You

AN IDEA NEEDS SOMEONE
WHO CAN LOVE IT FOR EXACTLY WHAT IT IS

without needing to make it more acceptable, appealing or mainstream. To be creative, by definition, means to operate at least one full standard deviation away from the norm.

AN IDEA NEEDS AN UNSELFISH SPONSOR.

Let us not be so attached to what works and doesn't, or what others praise or don't. If we can find comfort in our role as creators, then we can create simply for the sake of creating, much like the universe itself does. It's not an idea's job, nor its priority, to make us famous, or rich, or popular. Ideas want or need nothing more than to experience some time as real, tangible manifestations.

AN IDEA NEEDS SOMEONE WHO IS AVAILABLE
AND READY.

If, when an idea comes to us, we blanch, deflect, or belittle, the idea will move on to someone more awake or enthusiastic. It's not personal. It's creativity. We've all had that experience of stumbling upon a great idea, but then, a few hours later when we try to recall it, we can't. Chances are, the idea wasn't sure we were going to claim it. Stay awake, pay attention, stay centered. That's when you'll find your idea (and if it's really meant to be yours, it will nip at your heels like a new puppy until you finally pay attention to it!)

AN IDEA NEEDS A
FEARLESS ADVOCATE.

Ideas, the best of the best, aren't seeking the faint of heart. They're looking for the most passionate heart, the person who can present the idea without letting fear of judgement, criticism, or even failure hold them back. Can that be you?
